7. The two parties recognize that, as a first step, a practical means of initiating collaboration between scientists of the two countries is provided by holding meetings of equal numbers of active researchers from each side alternately in Taiwan and the UK. Such meetings are known as N+N; the normal process of financing such discussions will be that the host country pays in-country expenses, the partner being responsible for international travel costs.

8. The two parties undertake to encourage other forms of collaboration, including individual visits by senior scientists and joint research in areas or subjects genuinely of interest to scientists of both sides based on the relationships built by N+N meetings.
